1. Between mid-February and late February 1954, the Wuhlheide Cantonment (4161) was estimated to quarter more than 2,000 troops wearing red-bordered black epaulets with tank and artillery insignia. The installation appeared to be more heavily occupied and more heavy weapons were observed, than previously. Between mid-February and late February, about 40 tanks, 6 to 8 armored scout cars and 3 probable SU-100 guns were seen at the meadow in the woods, as against 20 tanks previously seen there. On 27 February, about 280 troops, preceded by a band marched from the restricted area to the cantonment. Troops observed in the Wuhlheide received instruction on individual tanks and SP guns and 76/2-mm field guns.

2. Between 15 and 28 February, about 30 troops of a signal unit repeatedly left the Karlshorst restricted area (4162) for Wuhlheide, where they practiced construction of telephone lines. Numerous officers with black service color were recently seen in the restricted area. On 25 and 26 February, 2 SU-100 guns, 2 BA-64 armored scout cars and 2 amphibious vehicles were seen in the restricted area.

3. Between 6 and 15 February, the Wuhlheide cantonment appeared to be occupied as previously by about 1,000 troops wearing red-bordered black epaulets. On 12 February, 10 covered tanks and 1 BA-64 armored scout car were seen in the southwest corner of the installation. Little activity was observed in the installation during the period under review. Motor vehicles observed en route to and from the installation On 8 February, trucks were seen on An der Wuhlheide, coming from the direction of Republik der Jungen Pioniere and proceeding toward Treskow Allee. The trucks were driven by civilians, escorted by one Soviet soldier each.

4. On 28 February, Wuhlheide cantonment was occupied by an estimated 600 troops wearing red-bordered black epaulets with tank insignia.
